WOMENS MONTH
1 TO 31 AUGUST

Every year, in August, our country marks Women's Month, where we pay tribute to the more than 20 000 women who marched to the Union Buildings on 9 August 1956 in protest the extension of Pass Laws to women.

The National Women's Month programme is based on the ongoing interventions across the work of government, civil society and the private sector within the context of the national priorities outlined by government.

Women's Month allows us to gauge how far we have come in transforming society, particularly the transformation of unequal power relations between women and men. While also focusing on and addressing gender oppression, patriarchy, sexism, racism, ageism, structural oppression, and creating a conducive environment which enables women to take control of their lives.

EVERYDAY TIPS TO TEACH KIDS GOOD MANNERS

- Express gratitude. Teach your child the importance of thanking people for gifts and other acts of kindness. For example, encourage him to express his appreciation by saying or writing a prompt and personal thank you note for birthday gifts on special stationery or note cards. A preschooler can dictate his words to you and draw a picture or sign his name. School-age children can even send an email to thank someone.
- Make your empathy visible. Help your child understand that teasing a friend or saying unkind things will make others feel bad. Ask questions such as, "How would you feel if someone pointed at you and started to laugh?"
- Praise good behavior. Let your children know how proud you are when you "catch" them being polite. Before long, good manners will become second nature to them.
- Show your disapproval and explain why. If our expectations are appropriate and understood by children and the children don't meet them, disapproval is not only okay, it is important. When children misbehave, they need us to tell them that we expect more from them and explain what "more" is.

Additional ideas to help raise children with good manners:

- Help your child use words, not actions. Many times, young children behave badly because they don't know how else to express themselves. Play out some of the situations with which your child is having trouble and show her how to respond calmly and firmly with words instead of actions.
- Take turns. Children must understand that they have to wait for their turns, just like everyone else. The playground provides education in this area: establish zero tolerance for playground behavior such as pushing, crashing a line, or bullying. The same goes for interrupting.
- Share. Help your children understand the importance of sharing with others in school and in life. Encourage good behavior by complimenting them when you see them sharing with others. But also let them know that its the kind of behavior you expect.
- Provide rest and good nutrition. Children tend to behave badly when they are tired or hungry. Make sure they get enough sleep and nutritious food.
- Be honest. While "fessing up" to misbehavior is sometimes difficult and painful for children, they must understand that honesty is the best policy. When they admit doing something wrong, tell them that you would have been angrier or more disappointed if they hadn't admitted their mistake.

We all want our children to be respected and well-liked by others. The best way to practice having great manners is to be nice to mom, dad, and siblings. This is when most of us are at our worst." Developing, demonstrating and teaching good manners are lifelong lessons. Be patient with your child's developmental limits. Preschool children are just beginning to develop empathy and understanding that the world involves some complicated rituals. Young school-age children are still sorting through what is rude and what is exuberant. Refinement of social skills can take years to master.

By doing the best you can most of the time and expecting the most from your children with your gentle guidance, parents will see good behavior they can be proud of.
